

St. Rosalie School is the first Catholic school in the New Orleans area to host an exhibit from The Besharat Arts Foundation. It is called “Art in School: The Faces of Innocence.” This is the first exhibit in a series of four. The purpose of these magnificent photographs is for our students to develop sympathy and empathy for those who live in different countries and have different cultures through daily contact with the art, which presents similarities and differences among children of the world. Of course, at St. Rosalie School, the emphasis will be that we are all created in the image and likeness of God. We are brothers and sisters in Christ. Teachers will guide thought-provoking activities and assignments that will allow discussions and debates among the students. This will increase their observation and interpretive skills, help them develop an awareness of historical context, and develop critical thinking skills. Student reflections about the art will be sent to Mr. Massoud Besharat, the owner of the exhibit. We are most grateful to him for his generosity and insight into what this exhibit can foster in our students.

We are allowing the public to come through the school and see the art exhibit. The times and days for the exhibit are below:
